

Mental Map

East Texas

I spent 200 years here and I swear it never changed. The scent of honey and the buzz of bee wings. Lightning flashes across the skies, it floods every year. I watched you grow here twice over and when I finally fall asleep I hope you stay with me to tuck me in under a blanket of earth and rest my head upon a pillow of stone.

Detroit, Michigan

What makes you you was lost to history. Grey skies obscured by choking smog, thick neon sludge waking me for my 14 hour shift, the hum of machines running dozens of assembly lines, concrete walls block my view of the River Rouge. I gave up everything to leave you, I hope I never leave again.

Aroostook County, Maine

Snow dampens the sound of my footfalls as I head off home from work. Nobody goes here in the winter, the logging roads closed. Nobody goes here in the summer, vast stretches of territory unorganized. If you want to hide something in the East, hide it here, and hide I did.

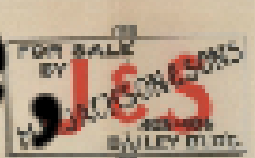

New Mexico

It was hot here, always hot, and the dust got in my eyes. I died here over and over again, not knowing why I bothered to spill my blood. I never did escape this place. My bones lie here to this day, next to a lead-laden river and a pit of gravel painted in red and blue. The scent of futility hangs heavy in the air.

I found community here, flowing in like the salmon run from Chicago, Kentucky,
New York, London. We
slept on piles of towels laid out in a house that never showed up on any map we could find and we laid in wait for a world that was ready to cast its gaze upon our faces.

I did leave here, though it took me a while.

Oranges in a stocking
on Christmas morning,
the sound of hoofbeats, the smell of beer. Never once did I look back on sagebrush-scented
nights or the crystal waters of Tahoe as I stood in the shadow of the pines. I did not remember you.
